About Cambridge University Symphony Chorus

CUSC is the original ensemble of CUMS, one of the oldest and most distinguished university music societies in the world. Since the 1870s, the society and chorus have offered an outstanding musical education for members of the University and Cambridge residents, providing performing opportunities for over 500 Cambridge musicians every year.

The chorus is a large symphonic, auditioned choir of 120 singers, which performs a wide range of music, with a strong focus on major 19th and 20th century orchestral choral works. Currently led by newly-appointed Richard Wilberforce, previous directors have included Stephen Cleobury CBE, Sir Philip Ledger, Sir David Willcocks and Sir Charles Villiers Stanford: with Sir Roger Norrington and David Hill and as recent guest conductors. The chorus strives to offer a platform for young professional artists, in recent years providing opportunities for emerging talent such as Ashley Riches and Rachel Ambrose-Evans.

In November 2017, the chorus presented an acclaimed performance of Handel Israel in Egypt in Saffron Hall under Richard Wilberforce. In March 2018, the chorus was honoured to be conducted by Edward Higginbottom in a farewell concert to the retiring chairman of CUMS trustees. Next season, plans include Bach Christmas Oratorio, Dvořák Stabat Mater and a semi-staged version of Mussorgsky Boris Godunov with Sir John Tomlinson as Boris and Ryan Wigglesworth conducting.

Luke Fitzgerald (Organ Scholar, Gonville & Caius College) writes:

The role of the accompanist at CUSC is ideal for somebody looking for some more accompanying experience, especially for those interested in getting to know some large choral-orchestral works. I undertook this in my second year studying Music, and found the experience rewarding – in fact accompanying the Brahms Requiem rehearsals in the summer term was a great way to get to know the piece before taking the Brahms course in the third year!

The chorus rehearses once a week on Thursday evenings. Two hours after a day of academic work, and (for some) evensong as well, can be more inviting some weeks than others: but overall it is enjoyable beyond just being a "worthwhile experience". It also provides a chance to meet and work with professional conductors, including the newly appointed director of music Richard Wilberforce. For me, it formed part of my preparation for the orchestral reduction question in the Music 1B keyboard skills exam.

The chorus includes a whole range of singers from students, staff and fellows to working and retired members of the Cambridge community – they are a welcoming bunch, and meeting members of the chorus in the rehearsal breaks was another highlight of the rehearsal experience.
